

Community Guidelines for Commenting on the Edward Ringwald Blog and the Interstate 275 Florida Blog

I welcome everyone from all walks of life to make a comment regarding an article that you may have seen here on the Edward Ringwald Blog or the Interstate 275 Florida Blog. So that everyone can have the opportunity to participate and at the same time maintain a family friendly atmosphere on the two blogs, the following community guidelines are established:

The guidelines for commenting on my blogs are as follows:

Stay on the blog topic.
Be respectful of others out there.
Don't hate or express hatred.
Don't use language that you wouldn't use with your parents.
No commercial messages of any kind.
Don't infringe on the publicity and privacy rights of others.
Don't submit personal information in your comment.

Personal information includes, but is not limited to, street addresses, email addresses, automobile tag numbers, identifying numbers such as Social Security numbers, and telephone numbers.

My blogs are moderated!

When you enter a comment, your comment will not show up immediately. Instead, your comment is sent to me for review and compliance with the community guidelines. Once I approve your comment, it will show up for others to see.

More information you need to know:

Racial slurs such as the n-word will not be tolerated, period. Anyone making comments of this nature will be blacklisted from making future comments on my blogs.

Blog comments that promote illegal activity will be reported to law enforcement. This includes any comments of a threatening or intimidating nature. I cooperate with law enforcement in investigating illegal activity. In other words, what you say on my blogs is not private.

Please, enjoy reading my blogs and commenting on my blogs but be mindful of the above community guidelines. If everyone abides by the above guidelines for commenting on my blogs, that will assist me in keeping the Edward Ringwald Blog and the Interstate 275 Florida Blog family friendly for all.
